

Dr. Goldman Rosas has opportunities for students who are interested in the following areas: design and rigorous evaluation of behavioral lifestyle interventions for the prevention of chronic disease and management of depression; mechanistic studies to understand how individuals make behavioral changes to promote health; research to understand how precision medicine approaches may be used to address health disparities; and community-based participatory research in diverse communities including Latinos, urban American Indian/Alaska Native adults, and adolescents.